Partnerships that scale impact to people

In September, about 150 people from Swedish, Danish and Somali government, civil society, business, investment, research and the diaspora met in Nairobi around one question: how do we move from good intentions to shared value partnerships that deliver lasting impact, at scale, for people affected by crisis?

We know that it takes trust, shared risk, programmes that encourage collaboration, and shared value for all parties. We now want to continue to learn from people with experience of what works, what does not and what it is needed to strengthen partnerships across Sweden, Somalia and the Horn of Africa in practice.

This small, focused roundtable is for people with both operational and strategic insights. Together we will explore how your experience can shape future strategy, programme design and funding, and how we can scale proven solutions in practice.

Themes we will explore

- ✓ How can markets create climate-resilient livelihoods that give people a real choice to stay?
- ✓ How can skills lead to jobs and enterprise for women and youth?
- ✓ How can we act together before shocks hit, and manage natural resources in ways that build peace?
- ✓ How can funding reward collaboration and shared risk across sectors?
- ✓ How can the diaspora, Nordic expertise and local partners build resilient economies together?

By invitation only

A small roundtable for invite-only participants under the Chatham House Rule, aimed at concrete collaboration and strategic development between different sectors.
